“Christmas is over”: Moving Forwards on Open Access

"First, we need open access. Europe must transition from a pay to read to free to read culture. (...)

Second, we must clarify copyright. (...) so that researchers are able to reuse and recombine big data – enabling Europe to become a leader of data driven science.

Third, we must create infrastructure. Europe’s final transition must be one from fragmented data sets to an integrated European Open Science Cloud. By 2020, we want all European researchers to be able to deposit, access and analyse European scientific data through a European Open Science Cloud”.

Carlos Moedas, Commissioner for Research, Science and Innovation, April 4 2016

Is Spring coming?

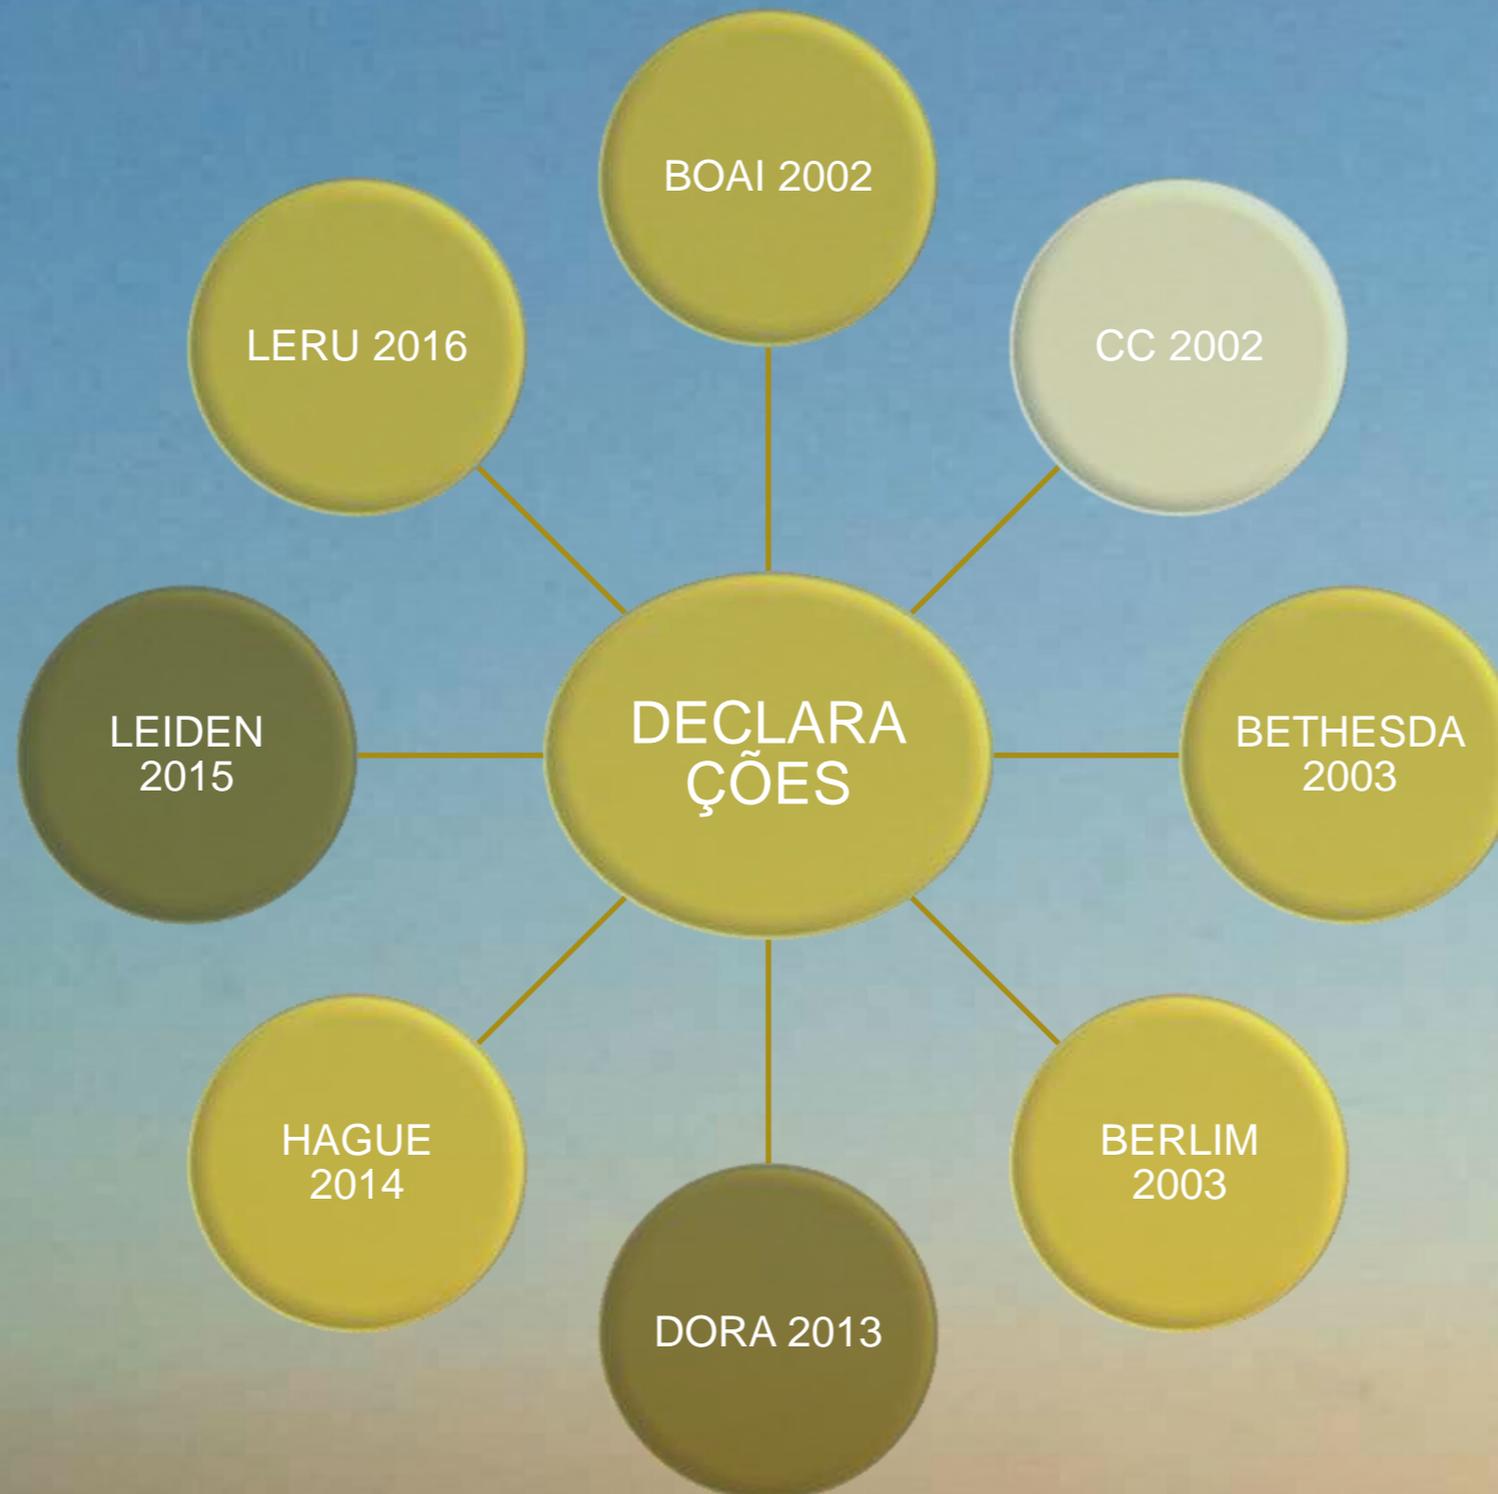

Knowledge creation and its dissemination are two sides of the same coin—knowledge does not impact on society if it is unable to disseminate (Merton 1993)

Sem uma disseminação eficaz a investigação perde uso e impacto

The Open Access Spectrum (OAS) Evaluation Tool quantitatively scores journals' degrees of openness. This independent measure can be of crucial benefit to authors, libraries, research funders, government agencies, and other interested parties. It offers a concrete, quantifiable mechanism to analyze publications' policies. The OAS Evaluation Tool aims to provide unprecedented insight and transparency into scholarly journals' degree of openness.
